

Spanish and Portuguese

Overview

The Department of Spanish and Portuguese is big enough to offer a wide variety of approaches to teaching and research yet small enough to afford students at both the graduate and undergraduate level personal attention and mentoring. The department offers an abundance of opportunities to learn and achieve mastery of the languages and cultures studied, which include Catalan, Nahuatl, Portuguese, Romance Studies and Spanish. Programs are specially designed for highly motivated students with a passion for other languages, literatures and cultures, for imaginative approaches to these, and for careful crossing of traditionally-defined geographic, linguistic and disciplinary borders.

The sequence of undergraduate and graduate programs is designed to help students gain competence in written and spoken Spanish or Portuguese through the structure and history of one or both of these languages, as well as gain a critical understanding of the development and achievements of their literatures in the Old World and in the New through advanced study and independent research. The department's policy is to maintain a balanced strength between language and literature and between Iberian and Latin American facets of a unified field.

Several faculty members are formally involved with or are active in other departments or academic units on campus — for example, Comparative Literature, Rhetoric, Film Studies, Gender & Women's Studies, the Portuguese Studies Program (<http://ies.berkeley.edu/psp>), the Spanish Studies Program (<http://ies.berkeley.edu/ssp>), the New Media Program (<http://bcnm.berkeley.edu>), and the Center for Latin American Studies (<http://clas.berkeley.edu>).

The variety of research interests and expertise held by faculty is echoed in the diversity of backgrounds and academic interests among students. While most come from California, a significant number come from other states and foreign countries. At the graduate level, about a third of the fifty-some students are from Spain and Latin America. A few regularly practice, as well as study, one or more of the literary, musical, or visual arts. The graduate students publish a journal, Lucero, and organize an international conference each year, which brings leading scholars to Berkeley to engage with students and faculty over several days. The Department holds professor- and student-sponsored colloquia on a regular basis.

Providing opportunities to experience the living languages and cultures studied in the Department is essential to the academic mission. Besides regular co-sponsorship of cultural events and performances on campus and elsewhere in the Bay Area, the Department currently administers travel study programs in Spain through UC Berkeley Summer Sessions (<http://summer.berkeley.edu>). Undergraduates are also able to study abroad for an entire year in a variety of locations in Europe, Latin America and elsewhere through participation in the University of California's Education Abroad Program (<http://eap.berkeley.edu>).
