

Anthropology

Overview

The Department of Anthropology offers students the opportunity to study humankind from the broadest historical and geographical perspective. Courses in the department offer knowledge of social and cultural aspects of behavior as well as the physical nature of humans. Lower division courses are intended to give a general understanding of human evolution, prehistory, and the nature of human cultures while upper division courses elaborate particular themes.

ANTHRO 250Z The Enigma of Authority 4 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2025

What grounds authority? The notion of authority – whether it be epistemological, scientific, political, religious, or divine – is in some ways linked to questions of power: the power to author and to authorize. But on what basis do we give credit to this power, and how are we moved? In asking what moves us to give, this graduate seminar touches on a key humanistic concern. Why is it that power can be produced, but authority can only be given? Why does a question concerning authority slide so easily into the register of the mystical and the divine? What does authority's enigmatic origins reveal? Considering the rise of authoritarianism across different political and societal contexts, it is timely to re-visit the problem of authority.
